About the park

Bourne Hall itself is a grade II listed building that includes a library, museum and rooms for hire. Various functions and events are held in the building. The grounds consist of landscaped gardens and an ornamental pond.

History

Until the 1920's Bourne Hall was known as Garbrand Hall. In 1794 Thomas Barritt bought the property and improved the garden with ornamental features, which included a bathing temple in Ionic style and a water wheel. By 1860 the property had passed to George and Elizabeth Torr, who together with their head gardener, continued to improve the gardens and grounds.

From 1929 -1953 the property was run as a school for girls. By 1959 the Ionic temple was in poor condition and the sum of £500 to rebuild it 'was considered too expensive', so it was pulled down.

Unfortunately Bourne Hall House deteriorated to such an extent that it was demolished. The building you see now was officially opened to the public in 1970.
